In addition to adhering to the annual theme, the entry could address topics including, but not limited to, preservation of wild lands, protection of fish, wildlife habitat, biodiversity, the support of threatened species, or similar aspirations that human members of the natural world strive to achieve in Mollie's honor. The award will be distributed evenly among group members.

About Mollie:

After earning an M.S. in forestry from UVM, Mollie Beattie began her public environmental stewardship career as Vermont's Commissioner of Forests, Parks and Recreation. Appointed to that post by Governor Madeleine Kunin in 1985, she went on to become Deputy Commissioner of DEC. A state park near her home in Grafton bears her name. Under President Clinton she became the first woman Director of the US Fish and Wildlife Service. Under her leadership 15 new wildlife refuges were created. Clinton named the largest block of wilderness in the Brooks Range of the northeastern Alaska National Wildlife Refuge after her. Among her legacies is the reintroduction of the grey wolf to northern Yellowstone National Park. She wrote, "What a country chooses to save is what a country chooses to say about itself." Mollie died of a brain tumor at age 49 in 1996. The environmental community universally mourned her passing.

Norwich University Military History Prize

Sponsored by Norwich University

The Norwich University Military History Prize of $100 recognizes an outstanding Vermont History Day project on military history. This research field can include any time, place, or topic relating to warfare. A military historian may be someone who explores the decisions of commanding officers or the feats of soldiers in battle. The field could examine the experiences of men and women in uniform, or the influence of politics and culture on the armed forces. Military history also looks at populations who waged war, endured hardships, and reckoned with the aftermath of wars. Students should study military history in their quest to become engaged and informed citizens, who consider and question the use of military force – in the past, present, and future. With this goal in mind, this prize will be awarded for the best Vermont History Day project in military history.
