The Enormous Panther

Shot in Barnard, Vermont, on Nov. 24, 1881, by Alexander Crowell, will be Exhibited

At Near the Arch Head of State Street

On Tuesday Nov. 21st for a few days (?)

This is the largest Panther of which history makes any record. The dimensions are as follows: length of body, 67 inches; height, 3 feet 2 inches; hind girth, 4 feet 8 inches; forward girth, 3 feet 8 inches; circumference of forearms, 22 inches; circumference of head, 29 inches; length of tail, 37 inches.

In South America this animal is known as the Puma, or Lion, and it is believed to be identical with the California lion, so –called. In Vermont it has always been called by many a Catamount, but its true designation is the North American Panther, and this is the finest specimen ever exhibited. He was shot by Mr. Crowell as a distance of about one rod only, and with a shot gun at first and afterwards with a rifle. His movements were so noiseless that Mr. Crowell found himself in this dangerous proximity before he was aware of it, and it was only by great coolness and darting that he severely wounded the animal and perhaps saved his own life. The Panther is preserved just as taken, and not a stuffed skin.

An exhibition of this noble specimen of a very rare wild beast will be given as above and no one should fail to improve the opportunity to see it.

Admission, 10 cents.
